

How People Learn

Module 2: Cognitive Processes of Learners

Scratch Story: Jinho

I remember reading the news and thinking that I should do something about this, but I don't know what I should do about it. And then I listened to this song, "Hands." It featured different artists coming together and singing a song together, and I thought, why couldn't we as Scratchers create something together?

I have a multi-animator project that we Scratchers made together after the Orlando tragedy that happened, to honor the people who died in the Orlando tragedy. This project is a multi-animator project, which means that each part was animated by a different animator and we all stitched it together to create the final product. I think around 40 or 50 people were involved making that project.

Scratch is a really open place where you can share anything you want, and you can express your feelings however you want, and I think that's a really beautiful part of it. My hope for the project when I shared it with the community was to be able to reach out to some of the other people in this generation and know that there are people who support them.